This book aims to provide some general understandings towards persons with visual disability as well as provide some contextual insights of their marriage, focusing on the phenomena of happiness. A common stigma surrounding persons with visual disability is that their lives might be filled with challenges, and thus facing difficulties in managing familial institution. The authors would like to provide a different perspective, focusing on the positive aspects of the lives of persons with visual disabilities, hence highlighting that such population is equal to the non-disabled. This book is divided into six chapters, which encompasses topics such as the theoretical viewpoints of happiness, the phenomena of marital happiness illustrated through three cases which include the dimensions and sources of marital happiness, as well as the strategies applied to improve or maintain marital happiness.

The title of this guide book was thought up by a group of friends who were lamenting the sad fact of the poorly educated male in the romance department. Even at the sophisticated age of 50+ most men are clueless in how to successfully court and woo a woman. We discussed all the commonsense things men could do to make themselves more appealing. On the bottom of the list was sex. Because sex would not even be on the agenda if the man was boorish in behavior. However, if he was thoughtful, kind, attentive and unselfish, the direction of the relationship would be a completely different story. Therefore the goal of this book is to make both men and women happy, and to enjoy sex as the frosting on the cake in a meaningful relationship.
