A living trust is a legal document that, just like a will, contains your instructions for what you want to happen to your assets when you die. But, unlike a will, a living trust can avoid probate at death, control all of your assets, and prevent the court from controlling your assets if you become incapacitated.

Understanding Trusts A trust is one of the fundamental documents of estate planning, but they come in many forms, from revocable and irrevocable trusts to living and testamentary trusts. Learn which trust is best for you and your family.

Understanding Trusts—The Balance
A living trust is a legal document created by you (the grantor) during your lifetime. Just like a will, a living trust spells out exactly what your desires are with regard to your assets, your dependents, and your heirs. The big difference is that a will becomes effective only after you die and your will has been entered into probate.

Will trusts and long-term care. If you use a will trust and your partner dies, you as the surviving spouse retain a right to live in the house. If you need to pay for care, only your share of the home's value will be assessed by the local authority. The part owned by the trust is not counted. In this way it's protected from care home costs.

Will trusts and lifetime trusts—Which?
A Living Trust is distinguished from a traditional trust in that it lets you manage your own trust, as long as you live. In effect, you, as Grantor, also act as your own trustee and beneficiary while you're still alive. The trust beneficiaries you designate assume rights to your trust property after your passing. The flexibility of a revocable Living Trust is one of its main advantages since it allows you to change your mind, make amendments, or end the trust anytime you wish.
